The Building

The Lodge is a unique heritage site located in the center of Brussels, just steps away from the Avenue Louise.

This historical building was originally a Masonic temple and its exceptional character has been preserved ever since. It was built in 1934, following the plans of modernist architects Fernand Bodson and Louis Van Hooveld. The building is part of a group of four houses, all designed by Fernand Bodson. Together they form a small but exceptional architectural site in the heart of the city. The design of the temple is elegant and sober, far from the Egyptian style found in most Masonic lodges.

The building hosted the activities of Le Droit Humain, the first mixed-gender Freemason obedience in Belgium, until 1976. From 1984 to 2011, the former lodge housed the Museum of the AAM (Archives d'Architecture Moderne). After the re-location of the Museum of Modern Architecture Archives, the foundation decided to continue to allocate the building to culture and the presentation of exhibitions.

La Loge as we know it today was created in 2012 by curator Anne-Claire Schmitz to become a space dedicated to contemporary art, architecture and theory. In 2017, La Loge commissioned artist and designer Stéphane Barbier Bouvet to rethink the design and use of the second floor for organizing and hosting public programs and openings.

His proposition consisted in arranging the different furniture and architectural elements in a logic of storage, an idea of stripping the architecture and concealing the craft objects as well as the industrialized units. The resulting proposal facilitates, destabilizes and modifies the existent conditions of the top floor of La Loge.

The architectural heritage of La Loge offers an intimate and charming setting, ideal for the organization of your events.

Its high ceilings and uncluttered decor make it a pleasant and open space, easy to modulate according to your needs. Next to the main room, smaller spaces can be easily converted and could be used as a reception area, a checkroom or even a technical room for your caterer.

Located between Avenue Louise and Place Flagey, La Loge is available for rent. It is an exceptional place that will give a unique touch to your event.
